The Mother's Last Greeting

A warm cloak, a parting kiss,
And a smile, all the last of the day.

A brown hat and a shawl of grey,
And a small bundle that made me say,

"Poor child, is this all you bring?
Will they be happy to have a thing?

When will you come back and see?
And will you ever be free?"

"Yes, Mother, yes, we'll come soon.
And we'll tell them all how they're gone.

And we'll show them how happy we are,
And how much they have loved their share.

And we'll bring them a present to see,
And a kiss, and a note for each one to be.

And we'll say, 'Don't you know we love you,
And don't you know we're coming home?'"

I felt as if I could cry.
I closed my eyes and wished I could fly.

I felt as if I could tell them my story.
And how much I wished to see my mother.

"Oh, Mother, oh, Mother, oh, Mother,
Why did you tell me that story?

I wish I could have been there with you,
And I wish I could have seen you, dear Mother."
